Expect plenty of hyper-realistic player simulation, AI and gameplay analysis from players who are literally moving. Once the tech is in the game, we'll be sure to report on it. The Hype Meter has also been added to Goalkeepers. If they're making a save, the goalkeeper will also trigger this interactive meter. The meter will be filled from the save, and if it reaches the maximum (3) at the end of the save, the goalkeeper will be awarded a rocket of praise from fans. While on the subject of hype, are you tired of trophy grabs? FIFA Ultimate Team is bringing back the much-loved feature with the new interactive Snapshot button in the new "Tap and Hold" feature. In FIFA 22, Ultimate Team offers even more ways to play, as a second mini-game, the Community Clash, has been added alongside online Seasons. Development and marketing Concerns have been reported about the FIFA series under EA Sports' previous publisher, EA Canada (EA2 was under the prior publisher Core Design). A positive response was given to the sport series by reviewers. The player-controlled creation of a sports franchise is a new feature and was announced by EA Sports on June 11, 2007, at the E3 conference. The announcement focused on the first iteration of the FIFA series, saying that a commitment to continuous improvements and a two-year development cycle would be necessary. The developer said that the creators involved in making this series would be able to design the looks and builds of the national teams, the leagues, and the stadia and that their ideas and creations would be able to be selected by the player. EA Sports said they want to create the same global and community-based football experience that the community gave the first FIFA games. Also it was said that the series will return to "old-school skill and strategy". A statement from the developer also mentioned that "we're using the latest in motion capture, which means players will now deliver more realistic passing and shooting as they get closer to their marks". Some of the new features announced included new national teams for the UEFA and CONMEBOL competitions, full player licenses, improved match engine, new event-driven game modes, new national team kits, player ratings, career improvements, and the addition of creation tools. Pre-launch news sites were unable to finalise the release date due to the manufacturing and processing of the discs. When the game was released, critics commented that the game was similar to the previous version of the game. Soundtrack Reception FIFA 22 received "mixed or average" reviews according to review aggregator Metacritic.
